This proposal is ill conceived and too broad. It encompasses all broadcasting and does not take leeway for religious based broadcasting that is self supported. I think the person who conceived this idea of allowing input from people outside of contributors, who might or might not agree with the programming is ridiculous. What ever happened to free speech, freedom of religion, freedom of expression, and the place of big government to follow the Constitution. If listeners to my radio station want to pay the full cost of broadcast, what gives you the right to monitor or even address content (as long as it is not vulgarly offensive). My suggestion is that you tread very softly in this area, as I expect that you will get a very blank eye if you even come close to regulating Christian radio,
